

Film Across The Curriculum

Drawing on his experience of integrating film into any curriculum and his experience working on the production side in film and video, Bill, an Emmy nominee, will demonstrate the richness that film activities can bring to any classroom, from the traditional English class, to social studies, science, and math. These cross-curricular ties are even more important in light of the Common Core Standards. Simple hands-on activities that don't involve showing an entire film will be demonstrated, and these activities will each be matched with a Standard Statement from the Core, demonstrating the curricular rationale for their inclusion in your classroom. The advent of YouTube has made teaching using film easier than ever before, but this session will show the many ways of using YouTube even if it is blocked at your school. A bibliography will also be provided with many resources for any teacher interested in bringing the movies to school.
